

ADVERTISING - SIDEBAR

Leaderboard

728w x 90h at 72 PPI (under 1 MB)
in JPG or PNG format with Link

Legislature

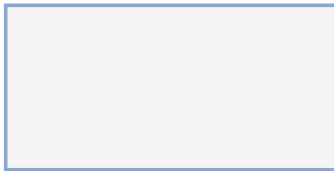

Lawmakers Look to Update Children's Code with 21st Century Language

By Avery Martinez - April 12, 2021

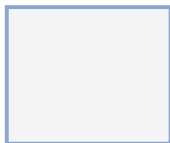

Colorado lawmakers are considering an overhaul of the Children's Code of Colorado for the first time in nearly 50 years, without making substantive changes to the statutes themselves. Sponsors of a bill to update the language said they feel the existing statute is too difficult for lay people to understand.

"Senate Bill 59 not only makes the statute more accessible to professionals who engage with youth inside and outside the courtroom but also families and youth," assistant house minority leader and bill sponsor Tim Geitner said. "And I think that's important to recognize as well."

The bill updates the statute with language that is said to be more current and comprehensible as well as section labels to point users toward the particular topics they need instead of looking across multiple locations for information. "A natural and organic flow" to the new Article 2.5 is said to make it easier to train professionals involved in juvenile justice, and pro se families, to use the section. According to the proposed bill text, the purpose of Article 2.5 is to restore, protect and improve public safety by creating a juvenile justice system that appropriately sanctions those who violate the law and also provides opportunities to bring together affected victims, the community and juvenile offenders for restorative purposes.

Geitner said the bill has needed work for some time. "Since 1970, this section of statute hasn't seen an overhaul, and it has been changed with various policy makers making additions. So, streamlining it and making that foundation is a critical part not just for the organizations in the juvenile justice system but also families that are looking to navigate it as they represent themselves."

Colorado has had a long history of juvenile justice reforms and long periods without change. According to a 2018 presentation by the Colorado Commission on Criminal and Juvenile Justice, Colorado was one of the first states to adopt legislation to protect children and establish juvenile court as a way of helping youth in trouble.

Assistant House Majority Leader Serena Gonzales-Gutierrez said the bill is about reorganizing the juvenile code. The bill, which has been in the works for years, involved the work of the Colorado Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Council, and its Children's Code Committee. The committee reviewed and made the definitions consistent, Gonzales-Gutierrez said. It also removed definitions from other articles that only appear in the new Article 2.5, modernizes the structure of Article 2 to align with Colorado Revised Statutes format and timeframes now follow the standard format on calendar days.

"It was imperative to the committee that the reorganization would be non-substantive," Gonzales-Gutierrez said. "We're not trying to change anything that's in law -- we know that will be perhaps for a different time and different bills."

Search

Quick Links

Subscribe to Law Week Colorado
How to Contribute
How To Advertise
Google News: Law Week Colorado

Reprints

If you would like to order a reprint of any article, please fill out the request form and we will be in touch soon.

Reprints Form

Subscribe to Legal Lasso eNews

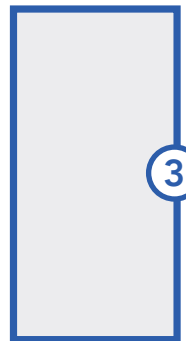

Email Address *

First Name

Last Name

Subscribe

*required

3

Half-Page

300w x 600h at 72 PPI (under 1 MB)
in JPG or PNG format with Link

4

Bottom Leaderboard

728w x 90h at 72 PPI (under 1 MB)
in JPG or PNG format with Link

TAGS 2021 Colorado State Legislature Juvenile Justice Senate Bill 59

LAW WEEK COLORADO

ADVERTISING - INLINE

My AccountLog Out

LAW WEEK

COLORADO

NEWS ▾COMMUNITY ▾SUBSCRIBE DIGITAL EDITION ▾SURVEYS

Legislature

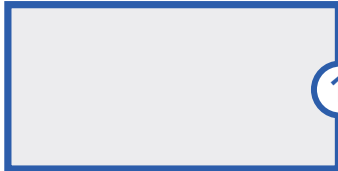

Lawmakers Look to Update Children's Code with 21st Century Language

By Avery Martinez - April 12, 2021

Colorado lawmakers are considering an overhaul of the Children's Code of Colorado for the first time in nearly 50 years, without making substantive changes to the statutes themselves. Sponsors of a bill to update the language said they feel the existing statute is too difficult for lay people to understand.

"Senate Bill 59 not only makes the statute more accessible to professionals who engage with youth inside and outside the courtroom but also families and youth," assistant house minority leader and bill sponsor Tim Geitner said. "And I think that's important to recognize as well."

The bill updates the statute with language that is said to be more current and comprehensible as well as section labels to point users toward the particular topics they need instead of looking across multiple locations for information. "A natural and organic flow" to the new Article 2.5 is said to make it easier to train professionals involved in juvenile justice, and pro se families, to use the section. According to the proposed bill text, the purpose of Article 2.5 is to restore, protect and improve public safety by creating a juvenile justice system that appropriately sanctions those who violate the law and also provides opportunities to bring together affected victims, the community and juvenile offenders for restorative purposes.

Geitner said the bill has needed work for some time. "Since 1970, this section of statute hasn't seen an overhaul, and it has been changed with various piecemeal amendments. So, streamlining it and making that foundation is a critical piece of work for the organizations in the juvenile justice system but also families that are looking to navigate it as they represent themselves."

Colorado has had a long history of juvenile justice reforms and long periods without change. According to a 2018 presentation by the Colorado Commission on Criminal and Juvenile Justice, Colorado was one of the first states to adopt legislation to protect children and establish juvenile court as a way of helping youth in trouble.

Assistant House Majority Leader Serena Gonzales-Gutierrez said the bill is about reorganizing the juvenile code. The bill, which has been in the works for years, involved the work of the Colorado Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Council, and its Children's Code Committee. The committee reviewed and made the definitions consistent, Gonzales-Gutierrez said. It also removed definitions from other articles that only appear in the new Article 2.5, modernizes the structure of Article 2 to align with Colorado Revised Statutes format and timeframes now follow the standard format on calendar days.

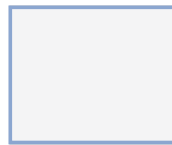

"It was imperative to the committee that the reorganization would be non-substantive," Gonzales-Gutierrez said. "We're not trying to change anything that's in law -- we know that will be perhaps for a different time and different bills."

TAGS: 2021 Colorado State Legislature Juvenile Justice Senate Bill 59

Search

Quick Links

Subscribe to Law Week Colorado
How to Contribute
How To Advertise
Google News: Law Week Colorado

Reprints

If you would like to order a reprint of any article, please fill out the request form and we will be in touch soon.

Reprints Form

Subscribe to Legal Lasso eNews

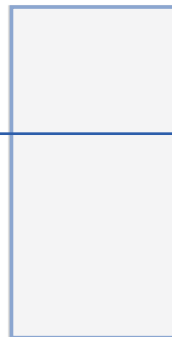

Email Address *

First Name

Last Name

Subscribe

*required

Half-Page Inline

600w x 300h at 72 PPI (under 1 MB)
in JPG or PNG format with Link

Rectangle (Block) Inline

300w x 250h at 72 PPI (under 1 MB)
in JPG or PNG format with Link